 SHORT STORY OF THE DAY.

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆ A MISUNDERSTANDING.

Edwin Pugh, in the New York World. Cheedle and I had spent the evening alone together, Mrs. Cheedle being out of town, on a visit to some relatives, and this was our crucial glass of whisky and soda. We had been very candid with one another, and were in a fine glow of honesty. "It's a breach of confidence, I'm afraid," said Cheedle. "And it isn't a thing you ought to know, because you are quite vain enough already. (No offense, of course, eld man. We're being frank, you know. Hang it all, I'm vain, too.) But I tell "Her sake." I asked.

"All in good time," he replied. "I wouldn't tell you at all, Phil, if I didn't repose so much confidence in your good taste; for, whatever else you may be, Phil, you are still a gentleman. You know Little girl, with flaxen hair? Rathera shade—too conscious of her profile."

"Yes. Ha, ha! Miss Marsh!" He sipped

WE want places for good girl and woman cook, and general housework, white and colored; fine pantry cooks; day laundress, BRIGHTS AGENCY, 215½ Independence ave. Tel. 1183.

"Yes. Ha, ha! Miss Marsh!" He sipped, solemnly.

"Weil?"
"It's a pity. My wife told me. I should never have suspected it, myself. She's a little bit impressed by you."
"Poor girl!" said I."
"She isn't a fool, either. That makes it all the more extraordinary."
"I don't see that."
"My object is to warn you against playing off that infernal trick of yours. You know what I mean? That way you have of talking to a woman as if she were the only one of her sex in the world. Do be careful, old man."

We were silent awhile. I got up, murming again, "Poor girl!" and weat home. I had not intended to be at the Massies' party on the following evening, but knowing that Miss Marsh would be there, and feeling anxious to begin the cruel disillusionment at once—that it might be sooner over—I dressed and went.

The drawingroom was crowded. I looked about for Miss Marsh, and espied her in a far corner. By slow stages I made my way toward her. She marked my approach with a wistful face, and when I was close made room for me. Poor thing! We shook hands, and I noted a tender light in her eyes.

"How hot it is in here," said she.
Oh, these hollow commonplaces uttered talmy in a gale of passion!
"Yes, said I. "I wonder if we could get out into the conservatory?"

We managed it by dint of many polite hustlings, strewing our path with apologies. Our end attained, we sat down under a tub-paim, and looked at one another.
"How pleasant it is out here," she murmured.
"So cool," said I.
"The usual rumor concerning you is out," said she.
"Indeed!" I cried. It was no time to be witty.
"They have married you again, Mr. Wroughtnight."

"Indeed!" I cried. It was no time to be witty.

"They have married you again, Mr. Wroughinight."

"Who is the unlucky lady this time?"

"It would not be fair to tell. And—two are mentioned."

Poor gir!

"You know that rumor is a lying jade, Miss Marsh."

"By nature—yes. But sometimes—by accident—she speaks the truth."

How valiantly women cover up their scars! EXPERIENCED canvassers, lady or gen-tleman, straight salary, paid every day, 329 Junction bidg.

How valuatly women cover up then scars!

"Of course," said I, "there is no foundation for the rumor."

"I had hoped there was," said she, softly. Brave heart! It was a dire business!

"There may be some day," I murmured.
"I mean that I expect I shall marry sooner or later."

"There may be some day, I murindred."
I mean that I expect I shall marry sooner or later."
"Oh, I hope so," said she. "When you are a little older. Some strong, helpful woman with ideals. Not a poor little society butterfly-like me."
"If she were like you," said I, and stopped. "She won't be," said Miss Marsh, quick-My heart was torn with pity of her.
"One so seldom marries the person one wants to." said I, breaking the truth to wants to." said I, breaking the truth to her gently.

"And how much better for us that is, isn't it?"
The rejoinder hardly pleased me.
"How do you mean, Miss Marsh?"
"I mean that the object of our first love is so rarely the person to make us really happy."
I remembered that this was her third season.

"First love is the only love," said L.
"Oh, no," said she.
"Oh, yes," I repeated firmly. It was no time for mawkish faltering. My duty was plain.
"Mr. Wroughtnight." said she, "believe what I am about to say. You are too young yet to know what is best for your own welfare."
It seemed an odd way to talk, as I was at least two years her senior; but I reflected that she was distraught—that she was fighting against her own happiness.
"I think." said I, "I know what is best for me, young as I may be. When my fate comes along—"
"That time is not yet, of course?" said she.

Oh, anxious, despairing heart!
"No," I cried, and shuddered in dread expectation of some tragic sign from her. But she was strangely calm. It almost seemed to me that a light of relief leaped into her eyes. The relief of the tortured soul at hearing sentence of death!
A great silence fell on us. She mused, looking at me with strange intentness.
"Mr. Wroughtnight," said she, "I have a mind to be honest with you. I have a strong prejudice in favor of honest dealing. My honesty may cost me your good opin-My honesty may cost me your good opin-ion, but I don't mind that. I mean that I have enough faith in your good sense to believe that you won't think me un-womanly and immodest in saying what I propose to say."

I rose in great agitation.
"Miss Marsh." I said, "pause, reflect.
Don't speak yet. You may save us both much pain."
"Nonsense!" she said sharply.
I was surprised and a little affronted.
"I beg your pardon," said I. "Go on."
She fluttered her fan nervously.
"I am afraid," she said, "we don't quite understand one another. At least I think sourly.

"Perhaps they thought they might make a match between us that way. Young married couples are always the busiest matchmakers. And, really, do you know. I think they showed some knowledge of

"I beg your pardon," said I. "Go on."
She fluttered her fan nervously.
"I am afraid." she said, "we don't quite understand one another. At least, I think I understand one another. At least, I think I understand one another. At least, I think I understand but you don't."
I moistened my dry lips. "Go on." I said again, breatblessly.
"Mrs. Cheedle has told you something about me?"
"No."
"Mr. Cheedle, then? Somebody?"
"Yes." said I.
""Hen I saw the absurdity of my position and summoned my sense of humor to the rescue. It was not possible to remain insensible to Miss Marsh's magnificent command of her own dignity.
"I was a fool," said I.
"I, too," said i.
"I, too," said is he. "But it does not matter, now it is all over, does it? And, anyway, nobody will know. We shall both keep the secret inviolate, I dare say, for our honor's sake."
"They were mistaken!" I cried, still willing to spare her.
"Yes, they were." she responded calmly. I gasped and leaned back in my chair.

"But with less reason." said I, bowing. She looked reproachfully at me.
